While many new innovations are surfacing to deliver care, support patient empowerment, convenience outside the hospital walls, these innovations have to be successfully adopted and assimilated into a complex health care system if continuity of care and reduced cost are the desired health care goals. Health care providers have to become service driven and co-create value with patients and family members for competitive differentiation, especially as patient satisfaction and bundled payments for episodes of care are becoming important performance metrics. The health care leadership has to align their internal organizational structure and strategy with intermediaries who are acting to mediate the relationship between hospitals and external care providers, all leveraging advancing technologies. Further, big data and sensor technologies are creating new innovations and challenges for these transformations.

This workshop presents three exciting panels from recognized hospital leaders and academics. Panels will discuss how patient care is being transformed in a hospital, prior to admission at home and at urgent care centers, and post discharge at nursing homes and pain management clinics. We will also address big data and sensor related innovations.
